WHILE INDIA WEPT - (1984) OLYMPICS

By winning the women's 400 m hurdles at Los Angeles, Nawal El Moutawakel became Morocco's first Olympic gold medalist. P.T. Usha failed by one-100th of a second in her attempt to win what would have been the first medal in athletics at the Olympics; she was fourth.

Main rival

She had considered Usha her main rival then. She has huge respect for her.

"Usha is my hero," El Moutawakel told The Hindu on the sidelines of the Laureus Sports Awards.

"If she hadn't pushed me hard, I may not have won the gold."

Earlier, at the function to declare the Jharkhand-based NGO, Yuwa, winner of the Laureus Sport for Good Award, she recalled how, like the football-playing, underprivileged girls from Jharkhand, she too had to overcome tough circumstances.

"Usha is my hero, if she hadn't pushed me hard, I may not have won the Gold."

Says El Moutawakel

"I didn't even have the proper outfit," she said. "I salute these girls. These are times when you see kids on the social media, with their devices taking them away from sports. They suffer from obesity because of the lack of physical education."

For her, the 400 m hurdles were a metaphor for life. "It was the school of life," she said. "There is a start, there is a finish and there are 10 hurdles. "They are the hurdles of life; sometimes you clear them, sometimes you fall down. You have to teach yourself to stand up. That is why I fell in love with my event, which was practiced only by men at that time."

It took her 20 years to meet Usha again, at the Athens Olympics.

"Before that, I was in India once and I saw this open marathon in Mumbai," she said.

"I went straight to this tent and grabbed the mike at the press conference and said, 'Excuse me, I am Nawal Moutawakel, and I won the gold in the 1984 Olympics, beating P.T. Usha. I am in your country and I am looking for her.' That was how I got in touch with her again."

She is happy that Usha has started her athletics school and passes on her Olympic dream to her wards.

"She is doing great work with her foundation. I am happy to find she has still the fire within her."

MALA, HELAN NARGIS: HOW ARE CYCLONES NAMED?

Mala, Helen, Nargis and Nilofer may sound like the names of yesteryear Bollywood actors, but they are, in fact, lethal cyclones that have brought violent winds, heavy rains and wreaked destruction.

As Cyclone Fani pounded the Odisha coast on Friday, the name, was suggested by Bangladesh.

Mritunjay Mohapatra, the additional director general of the India Meteorological Department, said Fani, pronounced as 'Foni', means a snake's hood.

But how are cyclones named?

The World Meteorological Organisation/Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific Panel on Tropical Cyclones, at its twenty-seventh session held in Muscat, Oman, agreed to assign names to the tropical cyclones in the Bay of Bengal and Arabian Sea, which commenced from September 2004.

The eight countries along the Bay of Bengal and Arabian Sea suggest names that are sequentially listed. The nations suggest names alphabetically -- Bangladesh, India, Maldives, Myanmar, Oman, Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Thailand.

The Regional Specialised Meteorological Centre gives a tropical cyclone an identification from the names list. The identification system covers both the Arabian Sea and the Bay of Bengal.

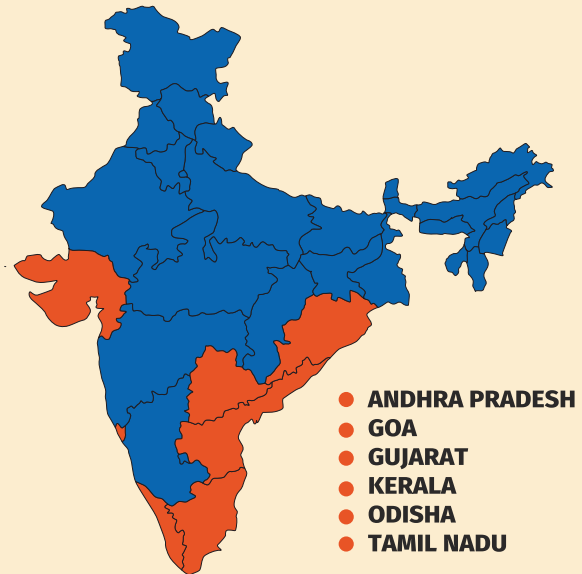

So, for instance, Bangladesh suggested 'Onil' the first in the list. Onil originated in Arabian Sea, off the Gujarat coast between September to October 2004. It made landfall in the state but impacted both India and Pakistan.

Cyclone Phetai, suggested by Thailand, originated in the Bay of Bengal and made landfall in Andhra Pradesh, ravaging the coastal districts in December last year.

The next cyclone, whenever it originates, will be named 'Vayu', suggested by India.

Of the 64 names suggested by these eight countries, 57 have been utilised.

Some of the names suggested by India are Agni, Jali, Bijli, Akash, while Mala, Helen and Nilofer were suggested by Sri Lanka, Bangladesh and Pakistan respectively.

"A storm causes so much death and destruction that its name is considered for retirement and hence is not used repeatedly.

"If the public wants to suggest the name of a cyclone to be included in the list, the proposed name must meet some fundamental criteria."

"The name should be short and readily understood when broadcast. Further, the names must not be culturally sensitive and must not convey some unintended and potentially inflammatory meaning." The name can be communicated to the director general of the IMD.

According to the IMD, in the beginning, storms were named arbitrarily.

Laxman Singh Rathore, a former director general of the IMD, said the practice of naming the storm first started in the United States. This helped identify it and also aided the researchers.

Earlier, the storm was named after the coast it hit, Rathore added.

Storms over South Pacific and Indian Ocean are known as cyclones. In the North Atlantic, central North Pacific, and eastern North Pacific, the term hurricane is used.

The same type of disturbance in the Northwest Pacific is called a typhoon, according to the National Ocean Service of the US' National Oceanic Atmospheric Administration.
